Fresh from end of bailout, Greek PM announces tax breaks

Greek has agreed to end his annual primary budget surplus of 3.5% of gross domestic product up to 2022. But he added that Greece could achieve its annual primary budget surplus targets without implementing further pension cuts, a position that would be presented to the European Commission before next year’s budget is drawn up in October.

Thessaloniki Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras (pictured) has promised a phased reduction of corporate tax to 25% from 29% from next year, as well as an average 30% reduction in a deeply unpopular annual property tax on homeowners, rising to 50% for low earners.

He also promised to reduce the main added value tax rate by two points to 12 percent from 2023.

The leftist premier said he would reduce unemployment insurance and increase the minimum wage. He also said the state would either reduce or subsidise social security contributions for certain sections of the workforce.

Today I can look in your eyes and tell each one of you that your resistance and your patience have borne fruit,” he said, referring to the eight years of reforms under Greece’s bailout.

New iPhones aim for momentum in sputtering smartphone market

APPLE

SAN FRANCISCO: Apple is set to unveil new iPhone models this week, aiming to gain fresh momentum in the premium smartphone market by introducing a new model that looks to be a game-changer.

The Apple chief executive Tim Cook has been tight-lipped about the new devices, but leaks and rumors have it that Apple is expected to release three new iPhone models, including an improved version of the Flagship X model released a year ago.

Apple’s event comes with the backdrop of a智能手机市场 that is facing a slowdown that’s collided with the uncertain macroeconomic environment. The best performer in Asia, China is already grappling with a slowdown that’s collided with the uncertain macroeconomic environment.

Apple plans to unveil three new iPhone models, including an improved version of the Flagship X model released a year ago. Apple is also expected to introduce a lower-priced iPhone with some X features but a less expensive LED screen.

The event may also include Apple Watch internet-connected wear with even more health features. Apple has sold more than a billion iPhones since the first model was unveiled by its late co-founder Steve Jobs in 2007.

The company is in the unique situation of controlling the hardware and software on its mobile devices, with content for users required to go through its App Store that takes a percentage of revenues.

In October that China should defend against the risk of a “Minsky moment,” or a sudden collapse of asset values. The concept is named for Hyman Minsky, an economist whose work focused on these kinds of contagions. The economic reality, he said, has changed.

“Today’s financial system is not the same as it was even five years ago. The financial system is much bigger than the real economy,” Zhou said that globally, there are concerns that a major economic slowdown is just around the corner. The China Daily continued: “People may become nervous.”

“But we are not the worst performer in Asia, China is already grappling with a slowdown that’s collided with the uncertain macroeconomic environment,” said Zhou, who retired just this year.

In its usual secretive style, Apple plans to unveil new iPhones, aiming to wow the world with a surprise such as augmented reality glasses or an Apple car that drives itself, the company has ramped up the amount of money it makes selling online services and digital content to the vast sea of iPhone users.
