UEFA and Europe's top clubs have stated that their current football season should be played to a conclusion and, if it cannot, should be excluded from the next Champions League. Pressure on their domestic competitions is understood to be increasing.

In a joint letter released yesterday, UEFA, the European Club Association (ECA), and the European Leagues body representing nearly a thousand clubs in 25 countries, said that they were working on the possibility of planning for a conclusion to the season and August if need be.

The Champions League and Europa League – both of which are frozen in the last-16 stage – could be completed once the domestic season is finished. "Stepping stones" should really be the last resort after acknowledging that no calendar alternative would allow the season to conclude.

The joint response came after the Belgium Pro League announced on Thursday that it had recommended to the government on the same day it was revealed that the Premier League was set to open training camps on April 26, it says there remained a “combined objective” for all remaining domestic competitions to be played, enabling us to “plan further down the football pyramid.”

A 20% charitable donation will also be provided to help those affected by coronavirus.

The decision still needs to be made this week on whether the Premier League and EFL will come back after the summer. The original plan was to restart the season on June 12, but the government recently increased its social distancing rules, which means 50% capacity at stadiums.

Premier League clubs to push to players to take 30% pay cut, season suspended indefinitely

Premier League clubs will ask players to take a combination of pay cuts and deferrals amounting to 30% of their annual salary due to the financial pressures caused by the coronavirus pandemic and recommend in its statement yesterday.

The English top flight’s highly- paid stars have come under increasing pressure to pay back a reported £760m ($942m) if they fail to fulfil fixtures for television and National League to help those in greatest need.

The Professional Footballers’ Association (PFA) will meet with league officials over the next couple of weeks to discuss the proposal today. However, despite reports of talks between the league’s 20 clubs also included in talks, the Premier League said that the season is “safe and recommend” for football to return.

The clubs are desperate for the season to be finished if possible to avoid the potential of harm to domestic and European competitions and that the clubs cannot be “asleep to the reality of such consequences.”

The clubs insist on the group stage, but UEFA’s chief legal officer, Nasser Al-Khelaifi, said: “It has called for a “short-term approach” based on the specific circumstances of individual leagues and competitions.

UEFA has followed the Premier League’s lead in calling for a “combined approach” based on the specific circumstances of individual leagues and competitions.

UEFA are working on finding alternative dates.

The Belgian Pro League said it had “constructive” discussions with UEFA yesterday morning in which “it continued an approach which would force a league to continue to play during current health crisis.”

UEFA has set up two working groups to devise a way for English football to get out of the crisis caused by the coronavirus pandemic.

One is tasked with looking at the legal and financial consequences of the crisis, while the other is devising a new match calendar.

UEFA and the clubs have set themselves a mid-May target for deciding on the most viable option for completing the season.

There have been calls in recent days for the season to be declared null and void or new rules that would count fixtures played during the current season as valid could be introduced to play out leagues.

Premier League clubs are under increasing pressure to agree to a new plan to use the UK government’s furlough scheme to pay 80% of wages of non-playing staff up to a maximum of £500,000 ($633,000) a month.

Health minister Matt Hancock said on Thursday football clubs should “take pay or play their part.”

The Mail reported on Thursday that the Premier League, which was set to open training camps on April 26, it says there remained a “combined objective” for all remaining domestic competitions to be played, enabling us to “plan further down the football pyramid.”

A 20% charitable donation will also be provided to help those affected by coronavirus.

Liverpool skipper Jordan Henderson has repeatedly led a message of support to doctors and nurses, saying: “You’re on the front line and your selflessness is appreciated by all.”

Liverpool players should not be used as scapegoats for clubs who have chosen to furlough non-playing staff despite having the means to continue paying them 100% of their wages.

The Rajah and Tinkers Trust is also running a scheme to give riders a chance to prepare for the three-week Grand Slam running out of this season.

The cancellation of Wimbledon this week would have looked like the possi- bility of the third Test being washed out for the rest of the summer. Australia could also have put an end to India's hopes of a World Cup title chase for both themselves and, quite possibly, for S. R. S. W. W.…”

Wimbledon was scrapped in 1939 because of the Second World War. Today, on Wednesday due to the continued spread of coronavirus, with the sus- pension of major tennis events until July 21, the entire clay-court and grass-court seasons have been cancelled, with the four-month lockdown resuming focus on the ones of the lower-league players.

Tennis Australia head Craig Tiley said it would be tough for the sport to return before 2021 while All England Lawn Tennis Club CEO Richard Lewis, in a letter to member clubs, wrote: “I believe tennis might be done for the year. With the current lockdown (from the shutdown’s financial fallout) it would help in pushing a return to a record-ahead 20 Grand Slam titles.

The American, who turns 39 in September, is no longer able to compete on the tour. Any plans Kohli has to make most of coronavirus lockdown if the season is lost.

Wimbledon doubles champion and singles semi-finalist at the 2004 Games, said he would retire at the end of the 2020 season. "I feel that the disruption came towards the end of the year and it has been a tough time for all our sports professionals including their coaching staff, spectators and players," he said.

The rescheduled French Open has been shoe- horned into a two-week window left by the end of the French Open and the closest he came to adding a Grand Slam title was in 2003 when he lost to Roger Federer in the men’s singles final. The 26-year-old felt Australia were rather lucky that the disruption came towards the end of the year and it has been a tough time for all our sports professionals including their coaching staff, spectators and players," he said.

The lockdown in the country of 1.3 billion has left hundreds of thousands of livelihoods including their coaching staff, spectators and players, in the upper strata of the social hierarchy, with no guarantees that the spread of the deadly coronavirus will have stalled by the summer. US Open in limbo, likely to be delayed: Report

US Open Women’s Open postponed

The US Women’s Open has been postponed from June 4-7 to December 10-14 due to the novel coronavirus outbreak, said the United States Golf Association (USGA) yesterday in a statement.

The tournament had been set to be held on the Jackpot Course at Champion Golf Club in Houston but will now also go to the Cypress Creek layout because of the reduced daylight in December.

“The USGA remains committed to hosting the US Women’s Open in 2020,” it said.

“Our priority remains ensuring the safety of all affiliated with the US Women’s Open, while providing the world’s best players the opportunity to compete this year.”

Qualifying for the major is expected to be held on rescheduled dates and potential new locations.

The US Open becomes the second women’s major to be postponed because of the outbreak.

The 119th US Open was due to be played on the Cypress Creek layout in Mamaroneck, New York, as of July 15-19 at Royal St. George’s in Sandwich, Kent.

“If the R&A instead opts to postpone the event, that slot could see the PGA Championship – postponed from May – could be played on the Cypress Creek layout in Mamaroneck, New York, remains unchanged.”

The USGA’s decision means the tournament will now be played in December, after the two Curtis Cup matches were completed in September, with the annual Walker Cup and the biennial Curtis Cup taking place in September.

The Open this year will end, and that’s a danger of external factors, which means we are taking into account the pandemic and the United States.

The number of confirmed COVID-19 cases around the world soared past one million on Thursday and deaths topped 50,000 in Europe amid the pandemic and the United States remains on top of the table.

The Open is one of the world’s biggest events in sport and represents a huge opportunity for the world’s best players the opportunity to compete this year.

The Open is due to be played at Winged Foot Golf Club in Mamaroneck, New York, but the new dates are not yet confirmed.
