India to hold polls in Bihar despite rise in virus cases

India’s coronavirus case tally surged to 5.82 million in the last 24 hours, data from the health ministry showed yesterday. A total of 1,141 people died of COVID-19 in the last 24 hours, the ministry said, taking the death toll to 78,290, which is a relatively low 1.6 percent of all cases.

India announced local elections involving millions of votes in the Indian state of Bihar even as it reported a record number of coronavirus deaths (COVID-19) yesterday and remained under intense security grounds.

Hajran Ali, a 32-year-old day laborer, was killed in a road accident near the state of Bihar with a population rough estimate of 94 million people. The truck hit a large truck tail in the same accident.

The election will be held in two phases on October 28 and November 7, with results to be announced on November 10.

The decision to hold elections in Bihar comes amid rising concerns about the virus situation in the state.

India, which has one of the country’s weakest public health systems, has one of the world’s largest COVID-19 outbreaks, with more than 174,000 cases confirmed and 1,141 deaths. The country has one of the lowest recovery rates in the world, with only 2.3 million cases confirmed so far.

In a statement, Chief Minister Nitish Kumar said that the election will be held despite the pandemic.

The decision comes under intense scrutiny from the United States on national security grounds as TikTok has come under intense scrutiny in the US.

The TikTok app has come under intense scrutiny in the United States in recent months, with leaks revealing that the video-sharing platform did not pose any significant risk to national security.

A TikTok executive said that the company's content moderation policies were in line with international standards.

The company has made significant efforts to comply with US laws and regulations, including the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA).

In recent months, the company has faced scrutiny over its data collection practices and its relationship with the Chinese government.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi’s government has been pushing to ban TikTok in India, but the company has continued to operate in the country, despite being banned in other countries.

Owner of fire-striken ship to pay $1.8m for Sri Lankan help

The owner of a large oil tanker that caught fire off Sri Lanka’s coast has been ordered to pay $1.8 million for the country’s extensive cleanup efforts, according to a Singapore court.

The court also ordered the owner to pay $1.8 million for the arrest of two crew members who were on board the ship when the fire broke out.

Singapore SwabBot pushes boundaries

Seeking to improve the speed and efficiency of the test, Indonesian authorities have developed an automated swab collection device that could also cut roles facing heavy-duty tasks.

The swab process is self-automated, collecting the test sample against the vaccine,” SwabBot said in a statement.

“It is a little bit tricky but that’s normal,” said Julianto, a 63-year-old security guard at an international airport.

He said he would be trained in the process of collecting the sample in the coming days.

The swab process involves an extendable swab stick to collect samples from the nose.

Surrounded by a small group of people, the patient places their nostrils around the stick and the healthcare worker applies an extendable swab stick to collect samples.

A Singapore company, SwabBot, has developed a device that can be used to collect samples from the nose.

The device is said to be able to collect samples from patients in just one minute.

In October, teams of outdoor enthusiasts will embark on a 1,200-km hike along the Indian marina boundaries of the country.

The hike is expected to last seven days and will involve a total of 1,141 people, according to a report.

The actual content of the discussion is not known to me, but it is likely that the Prime Minister did not order the test.

The test was ordered by the Prime Minister to identify any potential cases of COVID-19 in the country.

The Prime Minister said that the test was ordered to ensure that there were no potential cases of COVID-19 in the country.

Russian Prime Minister Mikhail Mishustin yesterday proposed expanding the non-interference pact with the US in the field of elections, while the Kremlin chief was accused of undermining the existing problem-solving system. The Russian leader said that he wanted the treaty to be abolished, as it was perceived as an obstacle to solving current conflicts. The treaty was signed in 2010 and has been described by Moscow as a “mechanism” to prevent interference in each other’s elections.

The Kremlin has repeatedly brushed off all allegations of interference and instead accused the West of interfering in Russia’s internal affairs. Moscow has considered the US allegations as a “false propaganda campaign” against the Russian capital.

WHO: Two million virus deaths ‘likely’ without collective effort

Two million COVID-19 fatalities are “very likely” without relentless global action to contain the pandemic, the World Health Organization said yesterday.

As the one million death toll for the disease that has surged around the planet the past year, two million deaths was not_unthinkable. One million lives and individuals do not come together.

“One million is a terrible milestone to reflect on before we start to find solutions. We are at the beginning of a useful exit strategy,” said the WHO’s emergencies director Michael Ryan at a virtual news conference.

“I think we are pro-actively collecting to do what we can to prevent this. If we don’t take those actions, we will not only reach one million, and sadly much higher, but we will ignore the voices of those who say you speak about are not only small, they are not being heard, and sadly very likely,” he added.

Ryan noted that there are dead at 2.8 million people in last December last year, according to a tally compiled by AFP. Nearly 42.3 million cases of the virus have been registered.

Ryan reflected on the challenges facing the production, distribution and producing anything as the global vaccine rollout against COVID-19. “Now is a look at some of our challenges and then we just look at the outcome of not getting the vaccine out there in the last nine months,” he said.

Ryan thanked “unknowing friends” for their help.

British police officer shot dead on duty

A British police officer was shot dead yesterday morning as an armed man believed to have then turned the gun on himself. Scotland Yard said, the first officer to be killed in a terrorist attack in the UK in over eight years.

London’s Metropolitan Police Service launched a manhunt after the shooting by a 25-year-old suspect who had been arrested and released on bail over the weekend. The suspect was later arrested as his vehicle was stopped by police. A large part of north London remained locked down.

Prime Minister Boris Johnson has described the attack as a “shocking and cowardly act”.

Wales announces lockdowns for its biggest cities

The Welsh government has announced that it will impose lockdowns on six cities in Wales if they do not follow national coronavirus lockdowns in other parts of the country.

The decision was made following a series of meetings with the Welsh Health Minister Vaughan Gething.

The announcement follows a UK government agreement that the Welsh government would be given additional powers to introduce lockdowns in the event of a new wave of infections.

The Welsh government will also increase testing capacity to 100,000 a day, and extend the number of people who can work from home.

Large outbreaks of northern and central England were already under lockdown restrictions as of last week. The number of people in lockdown is now at 10 million across the country.
