First lung transplant in Qatar within weeks

According to Dr Al Maslamani, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, organ transplantation operations were put on hold from March 2020 to September 2020. But three to four transplantation operations were conducted in November and December 2020. “We have already operated on 12 people and three are on the waiting list for a kidney transplant. This transplant is very important as there are no special procedures for the operation,” said Dr. Al Maslamani.

He also mentioned that 10 people are on the waiting list for liver transplant. Since the first liver transplantation was launched in 2012, more than 450 donors have signed up to become an organ donor. “Qatar has a very strong national transplant program and this indicates that people are starting to realise the importance of organ donation,” said Dr Al Maslamani.

The organ donor registry is a voluntary registry of individuals who have agreed to donate their organs after their death. It can be quickly accessed in the event of an identifiable individual’s need to determine whether an individual is an organ donor. “Qatar has a single waiting list for organ transplantation with unabridged access to transplant services irrespective of nationality.

Since the Qatar Organ Registry was launched in 2012, more than 440,000 donors have signed up to become an organ donor.

This is a fantastic thing, and I thank all my colleagues from the diplomatic corps who came to support the Emirati community. This graduation is a milestone to provide much-needed skilled labour in Qatar. This is making Qatarians change from unfiled to skilled. Worst who have graduated are now upgrading to different job grades because the Qataris also have the same opportunity to take the same examinations at a much reduced rate that the Emiratis do not have. The courses being offered are hospital safety training, Arabic language, graphic design, career training, etc. In addition to the important duty of providing support and encouragement to the patients, we are also looking after our colleagues. We have themselves, I have learned that being a caregiver is not as easy as managing a syringe, dressing wounds, or feeding the patients. Zimbabwe: EU renews embargo over rights abuses

The EU on Friday renewed its embargo over rights abuses in Zimbabwe, after the African country said it would not negotiate with the EU over the EU’s demands on human rights.

The EU, in a statement, said, “The purpose of the EU restrictive measures is to target those responsible for human rights violations, to keep them from profiting from these violations, and to encourage a demonstrable, sustained respect for human rights.”

The EU also said it would not negotiate with Zimbabwe over its human rights records, which it considers to be “extremely poor.”

The EU’s sanctions against Zimbabwe were imposed in 2001 and were renewed in 2010 and 2011. The EU has imposed travel bans and asset freezes on Zimbabwe’s president, Robert Mugabe, and other high-ranking officials.

The EU’s statement said that the sanctions were “aimed at putting pressure on the Zimbabwean government to respect and uphold human rights and the rule of law.”

The EU said it would continue to monitor the situation in Zimbabwe and would consider lifting the sanctions if there was “sustained” progress on human rights.

However, the EU said it would not negotiate with Zimbabwe over the EU’s demands on human rights, which include a cease-fire in the country’s ongoing conflict and the release of political prisoners.

The EU’s statement said that it was “deeply concerned” about the situation in Zimbabwe and that it would continue to monitor the situation closely.

The EU said it would continue to support human rights organizations in Zimbabwe and would continue to provide financial assistance to organizations that work to promote and protect human rights.

The EU said it would continue to support the work of the European Commission’s Office in Harare, which monitors the situation in Zimbabwe and provides information to the EU on human rights issues.

Poor countries aren’t getting vaccines: Waiting for intellectual property rights could help

Insecurity, suspicion will frustrate vaccine roll-out in war-ravaged Africa

The coronavirus pandemic rages, World Trade Organization representatives have potentially gathered around a table in India and India over how to make sure it equitably reaches low-income countries. On one side are the United States and other mainly Western democracies, where the major pharmaceutical companies develop and sell vaccines and related medical technologies are based. They want to maintain the status quo, in which the trade secrets of their vaccines remain in their hands to preserve profits and the incentive for future development. On the other side are South Africa and India, leading the charge on behalf of the vast number of countries without any -- or limited supply -- of vaccine doses and other equipment for fighting the virus. They argue that the current system is solving nothing for the long haul, because which Western countries have monopolized buying up existing supplies and propping up prices in the hope they could quickly nhiễm vaccine production in the new disease, and the gravity of the public health crisis. The latter's efforts to ensure an emergency mechanism to address intellectual property rights for vaccines and medicines, to allow countries to share intellectual property rights for medical technologies necessary for fighting the pandemic, must be made clear.

Dr. Richard Stengel, a former US diplomat, has said: “The only way the world is going to get vaccinated is if the wealthy world helps the developing world.”

In 2001, a deal was finally reached. Called the Doha Declaration, it specified that countries could temporarily suspend intellectual property rights for vaccines and medicines to help countries affected by the wars.

The amendments specify that companies could seek compulsory licensing -- a way for a government to use intellectual property rights for vaccines and medicines, to allow countries to share intellectual property rights for medical technologies necessary for fighting the pandemic, must be made clear.

"Scattered to widespread flooding is likely," said Philip Altemir, a weather forecaster at the Philippine weather bureau, "inland flood and rain-induced landslides are possible as well as strong winds that can cause damage to structures." The typhoon, with sustained winds of more than 110 km (68 miles) per hour and packing maximum wind gusts of 165 km (103 miles) per hour, is the first to hit the Philippines this year.

"If the authorities fail to provide the right assistance to these areas, the typhoon will likely cause severe damage," said AstraZeneca's Dr. Majid Fadili.

"We are monitoring the situation closely and are ready to provide additional support as needed," he added.

AstraZeneca, which is headquartered in London, UK, is one of the leading drugmakers in the world, and supplies vaccines to several countries, including Malaysia and Indonesia. The company has said it will provide 30 million doses of its vaccine to the two countries, with the first batch of 10 million doses expected to arrive in Malaysia in late March.

"We are committed to delivering the vaccines as quickly as possible," said Dr. Fadili. "We understand the importance of getting the vaccine to those who need it most, and we are working hard to ensure that it gets there on time."

UK Urges Security Council to Push for Pause in Wars

AP – UNITED NATIONS

Britain called on the Security Council on Monday to “suspend the use of military force” by warring parties, especially in Central Africa, to allow for vaccinations against COVID-19.

The British resolution is aimed at the various conflicts that have been a key driver of the pandemic and at warring parties to vaccinate people in conflict areas to be vaccinated for COVID-19.

Britain is working on the resolution, which Britain has proposed to the council’s emergency committee. Britain has been pressing the council to take action on the issue.

The British resolution notes the “large body of evidence” that there has been a “disproportionate impact” of the pandemic on people in conflict areas.

The British resolution also notes that “the pandemic has provided an opportunity to respond to the need to vaccinate people in conflict areas.”

The resolution states that “the Security Council should be prepared to take action to ensure that people in conflict areas are vaccinated for COVID-19.”

Britain has also introduced a resolution that calls for an “immediate cessation of hostilities” in Syria and Yemen to the United Nations, and a “pause in attacks” in the Sahel, which is home to some 250 million people.

A Moscow court yesterday rejected a bail request by opposition leader Alexei Navalny’s appeal of his verdict, the first hearing since the country faced an order from a top French court to free the Kremlin’s most prominent critic.

A few hours later, a judge in a separate case ordered Navalny a fine for defiling a national flag during a protest.

Venezuela begins vaccinating health professionals

President Alberto Fernández removed General González García from his post on Friday after a well-known local journalist said he had been given a coronavirus vaccination prophylactically after requesting one from the minister. The president instructed his Chief of Staff to request the resignation of “health minister” González García (spin doctor), who is in charge of the government’s COVID-19 strategy, said a government official.

The dismissal comes on the heels of growing dissatisfaction in Cojedes state, where mayors, legislators, autocrats and political parties have not received power received vaccine shots despite being part of the priority group of doctors, health personnel and teachers.

At the Miguel Peñalol hospital in western Caracas, 150 nurses or 90 percent of those on the payroll did not show up to work on Thursday to protest salaries of only 35 dollars per month. According to two sources of information, they plan to strike on Friday against coronavirus, said Vice President Delcy Rodriguez.

Official figures as of Wednesday showed that Venezuela had a total of 63,193 COVID-19 cases and 1,270.

Venezuela has around 1 million health workers, according to medical organizations. They frequently complain of low wages and poor working conditions in public hospitals, which suffer from lack of water, power and basic supplies.

President Nicolas Maduro has promised to vaccinate those over 75 and health professionals, but he has not given a date.

In a tweet posted on Thursday, González García said he acceded to the President’s request to step down, but insisted he was forced out by a “mutation standing.” He said that the previous postal election was split with 56 million Pfizer and Moderna doses before the end of the year in a bid to bring health professionals to the fore.

In April, May and June and 35-year-old adults, the nation has been vaccinated with at least one dose.

In light of the current situation, the government has started vaccinating seniors and children under 18 years of age.

Biden pushes for quicker vaccine rollout

US President Joe Biden faced critics at a news conference on Friday as he sought to speed up production of coronavirus vaccines, saying he was on track to deliver 20 million doses by the end of the month.

Biden said on Friday the US government was taking steps to increase vaccine supply, including helping Pfizer, the drugmaker producing the vaccines, to produce more doses.

Biden said the US government had delivered 8.5 million doses of the vaccine so far and was on track to have 100 million doses ready by the end of March.

The Biden administration has been under pressure to ramp up vaccinations, with millions of people waiting for their shots and the US facing a surge in cases.

Biden said he was confident he would be able to supply enough vaccine to the US population by the end of the month.

The Biden administration is trying to increase the production of vaccines, and the administration has identified candidate vaccines to move much faster, with the goal of delivering 100 million more doses by the end of March.

The US government has requested the Trump administration to provide information on vaccine supply.

The Trump administration, which has been criticized for its handling of the pandemic, has not yet entered a plea.

Biden's statement came as the Trump administration was under investigation by the US government for possible evidence of fraud.

Biden said the US government was on track to have 100 million doses ready by the end of the month, and the president was committed to increasing the production of vaccines.

The 518-year-old Mona Lisa has blighted by its own success: lacking in a museum that's big enough to accommodate the famous work by Leonardo da Vinci, which was on display in London's National Gallery until 2019. The painting was sold at auction for more than $85,000. The file contains the Mona Lisa, which was painted in 1503 by Leonardo da Vinci. It depicts a woman known as the Louvre, which has been hosting the art work for over 200 years. The painting is the most famous painting in the world and is considered to be one of the greatest works of art ever created. The painting measures 201 cm x 100 cm (79 inches x 39 inches) and has been on display in the Louvre since 1797. The painting is a portrait of Lisa Gherardini, the wife of Francesco del Giocondo, and it was the only work of art that da Vinci ever completed. The painting was commissioned by Francesco del Giocondo for his wife, Lisa, and it was originally intended to be a portrait of the couple. However, da Vinci became so absorbed in the painting that he never finished it. The painting is known for its use of light and shadow, which creates a sense of depth and atmosphere. The Mona Lisa is also known for its enigmatic smile, which has been the subject of much speculation and interpretation over the years. Despite its age and the many controversies surrounding it, the Mona Lisa remains one of the most popular and recognizable works of art in the world. It is estimated that over 10 million people visit the Louvre every year to see the painting. The painting has been the subject of many books, films, and television shows, and it has been reproduced on countless products, from postcards to T-shirts. The Mona Lisa has become a symbol of art and culture, and it continues to captivate and inspire people all over the world.
